From videographer, Thomas Hetherington, comes the documentary 'The Right to Educate' a short documentary focusing on the inequality of education across India and the effect this has on the poverty gap crisis. Providing an unbiased glimpse into India education. Diving into the minds of educational experts, historical findings and changes throughout time.

My film aims to inform and educate the audience, telling a story of education and class. I want to provide an unbiased glimpse into the India education crisis. Through using research information from the Central Board of Secondary Education and Indian government sources, such as The Right to Education Act, 2009 and the 2019 National Education Policy.

Diving into the minds of educational experts, historical findings and changes throughout time. I use a combination of interviews, B-roll footage, infographics and music to create a very interesting and fast paced informational documentary. The concept of my documentary is based around questioning the ethics of modern Indian society. I intend to deliver a message about equal education across all ages and class, creating a potential view of future equal opportunities and breaking the caste cycle that is put down on children by their parents.
